The weekend is coming up, and its always hard to decide what to watch in your free time – especially if you’re looking for great LGBTQ content. Well, never fear – here are some classic LGBTQ movies to catch up on immediately.

But I’m A Cheerleader

If you loved Russian Doll and Orange is the New Black, you will definitely love this dark comedy starring Natasha Lyonne as the titular cheerleader. You wouldn’t think a story mostly set at a conversion camp would be this funny and heartwarming, but it certainly is. And it gets bonus LGBTQ points for icon Clea Duvall as the main character's love interest.

If you haven't seen Brokeback Mountain, what are you even doing? The story of two men who love each other, but are too afraid to be together, is a heartbreaking and beautiful film starring Heath Ledger and Jake Gyllenhaal. It won tons of awards when it came out in 2007, which

Not only was this movie filmed entirely on iPhone 5s', it actually features trans actors

s characters, which is still all too rare in Hollywood. It's also a great story, subversive areas of culture (many of the film's characters are sex workers)

Moonlight might be best known at this point as a meme. You know the moment at the Oscars when La La Land was mistakenly announced as best picture, and it wasn't resolve until part way through their speech? Well, Moonlight was the rightful winner, and for good reason. It tells the story of Chiron, starting from childhood and going through adulthood, coming to terms with himself and his sexuality. It's a beautiful, well told story, and deserved every award it got,

Imagine Me and You

Have you ever watched a romantic comedy and hoped that the lead and her best friend r away together? Well, good news – that’s kind of what happens in Imagine Me and You, which opens with the wedding of Rachel (played by Piper Perabo) and some guy. Enter Luce, played by Lena Headey. Spoiler alert – that marriage doesn’t last all that long.
